Presentation

A femicide has taken place, the ex-companion José has confessed to the charges.

The public opinion, however, is seemingly unconvinced of the guilt of the perpetrator, therefore let us proceed with the trial: what does the victim have to say? what does the murderer reply?

The Carmen case is a behind close door hearing where the prosecutor, the victim, the defendant, the defence and witnesses expose the facts, respond to the charges and contest the allegation of defamation.

Testimonies of a loyal audience, who has acclaimed Bizet's work for almost 150 years, will be heard, just like the score. The hearing is open!

An opera creation from Bizet's masterpiece, conceived by the stage director Alexandra Lacroix in collaboration with the composer Diana Soh. Creators duo wishing to unveil alternatives from a destiny which shouldn't have been fatal, neither yesterday nor today...

The stage is divided into 2 parts.

On one side, a courtroom where we follow a criminal trial proceedings and on the other side, situations extracted from the work of Bizet that serve as vivid reminders of the past.

From both a musical and scenic point of view, the 2 parts intertwine and communicate with each other.

For 9 singers, 13 instruments - flute, clarinet, oboe, bassoon, trumpet, trombone, horn, percussions, piano, violins, viola, violoncello, double bass une mise en scène crédible et très bien pensée.

une distribution francophone très convaincante et un orchestre très en forme.
Lucie Leguay dirige les treize musiciens d'une main ferme et nerveuse.

toutelaculture.com (Hélène Biard)

La démarche d'Alexandra Lacroix est éminemment subtile. Plutôt que de tripatoigner une œuvre célèbre comme certains ne se privent pas de le faire en d'autres occasions, elle l'a en quelque sorte recréée. Son « The Carmen Case » est ainsi une œuvre inédite (...) si le propos et la mise en scène d'Alexandra Lacroix sont convaincants, la partition, à la fois réinventée et « inouïe », de Diana Soh est tout aussi pertinente. (...) c'est brillant! D'autant que Lucie Leguay, la cheffe, et l'orchestre United Instruments of Lucilin l'expriment au mieux, dans ses effets, dans ses nuances, dans ses climats.

Luxemburger Wort (Stéphane Gilbart)

Pour sonder le présent et mieux se projeter ensemble dans l'avenir, le patrimoine culturel subit ces derniers temps un dépoussiérage forcé, confronté qu'il est aux préoccupations sociétales modernes. Forcément, ça fâche, entre les traditionalistes qui le considèrent comme indéboulonnable, et ceux qui veulent le raturer, voire l'effacer totalement des ardoises (« canceller » comme on dit), car il reste le témoin et le passeur d'idées fanées. Au milieu, l'intelligence, la finesse et la mesure restent toujours les meilleures alliées pour trouver un juste équilibre dans la cohue, comme l'a fait Alexandra Lacroix dans sa relecture de Carmen. (...) Physiquement et lyriquement engagés, les acteurs-chanteurs ne souffrent d'aucune faiblesse, tout comme le discours d'Alexandra Lacroix.

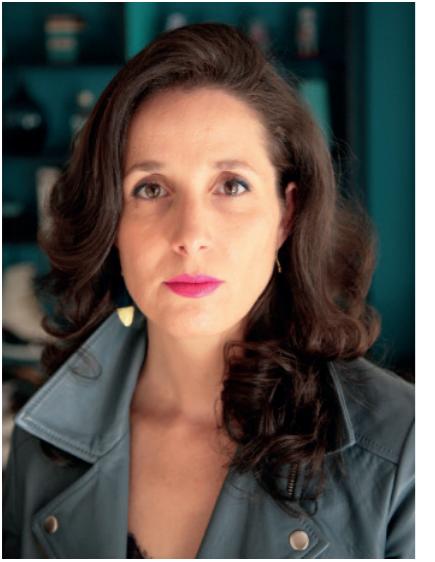

Le quotidien du Luxembourg (Grégory Cimatti)

Dans « Carmen, cour d'assises », il s'agit de considérer et d'écouter autrement le chef d'œuvre de Bizet. Le travail de la librettiste passe par une relecture en profondeur du livret de Henri Meilhac et Ludovic Halévy et une immersion dans le milieu des tribunaux pour vivre de l'intérieur le déroulé d'un procès en cour d'assises. Fort réussi, le prélude instrumental flirte avec la musique de Carmen et donne un avant-goût des tours et détours de l'écriture facétieuse de Diana Soh dont Lucie Leguay et les musiciens d'Ars Nova nous font apprécier toutes les subtilités.

Alexandra Lacroix, librettist & stage director

She studied at the 'École Nationale supérieure des Arts Décoratifs' in Paris, while also working in different collaborations with stage directors, light designers and videographers, especially in opera de Paris & Théâtre National de Strasbourg.

At the end of her studies, her passion for music leads her to the direction of music and art performances: she created performances at the Bibliothèque Nationale de France (2005), at the Fondation Avicenne (2005), CNSMDP (2006), at the Box in Paris (2010). voi[e.x.s] in the frame of Nuit Blanche Paris 2019.

In 2007, she co-founded the musical theater company MPDA, of which she is the artistic director. She is experimenting with innovative ways of presenting opera by questioning the scene / theatre hall relationship, a deeper connection with the audience and the free movement of the musicians.

She has created 22 shows (staging, scenography, dramaturgy), including Britten's Illuminations (directed by Adrien Peruchon) with the Paris Chamber Orchestra, L'Arlésienne at the Opéra Comique with the orchestra Pelléas, La chatte métamorphosée en femme (directed by Benjamin Lévy) at the Musée d'Orsay, a trilogy after Bach's Les Passions (directed by Christophe Grappéron): Et le coq chanta ... at the Théâtre de l'Athénée, d'autres le giflèrent at the Carreau du Temple, Puis il devint invisible at the Jean-Vilar Theater in Vitry, Trauma at the Maison des Métallos, voix intimes 14-18 and Ravel croisière intime at the Limoges Opera House,

In 2019, she made the concept, the adaptation of the libretto, the stage direction and the scenography of Be My Superstar, a contemporary tragedy, an opera about bullying for 14+, produced by LOD Muziektheater and ENOA's network. It is touring during 2020 in Europe (Opera Vlaanderen, Snape Maltings, Grands Théâtres de la Ville de Luxembourg, Festival Aix-en-Provence, Dutch National Opera, Helsinki Festival...).

In 2021, she created Persées, after Camille Saint-Saëns in dialogue with refugee testimonies.

In Nov. 2022, she staged La Princesse jaune et autres fantasmes à l'opéra de Limoges where she is artist in residency.

In Nov. 2023, she staged 4 seasons (Vivaldi) in Carreau du Temple, Paris.

In Feb. 2024, she will stage Belboul (Massenet/Madarresifar) at Opéra de Reims.
